This Week's Reflection

It is human nature to measure ourselves by other humans. For example, Cain's frustration when God chose Abel's sacrifice over his own led him to murder his brother (Genesis 4:1-8). From then to today, we feel inferior to our superiors and superior to our inferiors

As a result, when we learn of people who commit sins we are not committing, we are tempted to overlook the sins we are committing. But this is like learning that your neighbor has heart disease and then ignoring your cancer.

When an Englishman named John Bradford saw criminals being led to their execution in 1553, he reportedly stated, "There but for the grace of God go I." When you and I learn of the sins of others, we should say the same. But rather than presuming on such grace, we should also admit the sins we are committing with genuine repentance, contrition, and a desire for transformation.

This is happening at Waitara!
